Any form that the brush marks present in a small moment can be described as an extension of the senses or a process of proof of the value of being started at a normal moment.

Note

Every single one of the same moments that passed naturally did not have the same. From me, so was every moment of everything.

It is a process of expressing and displaying the inner blades that have been left small, and meeting one's whole self. Furthermore, it is a story about the value of existence of everything that passes through the same moment in the same way. It's an opinion of the time value of loss, and it's my story.

(medium)

It becomes a medium of current and communication filled with memories that change over time, the essence that remains unchanged, and the past and new memories that cannot be returned even if one wants to, and feels valued as being facing moments in oneself.

"Now, never again.
I'm here again."

Marks expressed in images are an important element of expression in the concept of a "moment" that sets them apart from any other drawing. In addition, the three-dimensional space of the exhibition wall where such works are assembled coexisted with the invisible axis of time.

Through this, the diversity of reality, another world made up of ordinary stories and small hours at every moment of value, and all of these moments are significant, making them a record of life like landscape paintings.

The philosophical meaning of a moment of time that continues to vanish forever is the driving force that makes me unable to stop the recording of the moment. It is also busy today recording the moment in the charm of this world that holds up the space created by it.
